Local Club Opens Season
With Philadelphia
April 11.

OCTOBER FIFTH IS

By "SENATOR."

Washington opens the American season of 1912 against the World's Champions in Philadelphia on April 11, closing the first series of three games on Saturday, April 13. Griffith's team closes the season in New York on October 5. Twelve Saturdays will see battle at the Florida avenue park and two holidays. On July 4 Harry Wolverton and his New York Highlanders will be the attraction, and on Labor Day Connie Mack and his Philadelphia Athletics, who should be very much in the thick of the pennant fight by that time, will be entertained at the concrete coliseum. The Nationals will play in Boston on Memorial Day, good date for the fans.

Not until April 15 will the ardent fans of the Capital be able to see their noble young heroes in action against the big league teams, but their first glimpse will also take in the Nationals, champions of the American League and of the world. This is some consolation for the late start on the home links. The Athletics will be here for five days, just a mere taste of baseball, for then Griffith will take his team to Boston for four battles before the Nationals leave for the first road stay of the campaign. May will be a banner month for the local fans.

From April 26 until May 22 the Nationals will be at home, facing the Eastern teams and then taking a fall out of the best of the West. To the Cobb will exert for the first time in 1912 on the Florida avenue diamond on May 21. Jimmy Callahan will make his debut in this city as a major league manager on May 7. Harry Davis will follow suit on May 11, a Saturday.

Play Four Games.

On May 24 the Nationals are down to open a four-game series in New York. From there they go to Boston for three games with the Red Sox, two of them on Memorial Day. While Fowler will buy tickets from Boston to St. Louis, where the Nationals begin their first invasion of the West, two of them on Memorial Day. Then come four games in Philadelphia and a trip back to the Capital for a short stay. Jimmy McInerney's Red Sox starting things with the Nationals, beginning on June 21. The Athletics and New York will occupy the busy mid-July, when the Nationals will play New York. After a vacation on July 4, Griffith's sturdy lead of hustlers will open a home stay with Cleveland. Western clubs will play here from July 8 until July 25.

On July 27 the Nationals will commence their second and last trip to the Western circuit, closing in St. Louis on Sunday, August 11. Back to Washington they will, with the Nationals, beginning on August 11. Cleveland, Detroit, and St. Louis will come home in that order. After them will come the Eastern clubs, New York and Philadelphia, before the Nationals hit the road again.

Begin September 4.

On September 4 a four-game series will be opened in New York before traveling to Cleveland, where the last invasion of the West will commence. This Western tour will close in Chicago on Sunday, September 22. From the Windy City the Nationals will come back to Philadelphia for three games, and then will be seen here in three games with the Red Sox.

The final trip will be to New York on October 3 for the closing three battles of the campaign.

The Nationals will have seven Saturday and eight Sunday games in the West. Conflicting dates will occur only in Chicago this season on May 5 and 26, June 22, and September 1 and 29.

Following is the complete schedule of the Nationals for the season. Cut it out and keep it for reference.
